Hoarding

15

Hoarding comes in several forms, each designed for specific environments, purposes, and durations:

- Construction Hoarding (Site Hoarding) Used around active construction sites to create a secure perimeter, protect the public, and control access. Often finished with branded graphics or “Coming Soon” messaging to turn the site into a marketing opportunity.
- Printed Banner Hoarding Temporary mesh or vinyl banners installed on fences or frames. Ideal for short-term projects, events, or developments where quick installation and cost-effectiveness are key
- Rigid Panel Hoarding Built using materials like plywood, ACM, or PVC panels. Provides a clean, solid surface for high-quality graphics and long-term branding—commonly used for retail developments and urban construction sites.
- Window Hoarding (Frosted or Printed Vinyl) Applied directly to storefront glass to conceal interiors during renovations while promoting the future business. Maintains a polished look while allowing light through if needed.
- Decorative / Architectural Hoarding Higher-end hoarding integrated into the surrounding environment with custom finishes, lighting, or dimensional elements. Often used in premium retail or high-traffic public areas.
- Safety & Wayfinding Hoarding Includes signage, directional graphics, and compliance messaging to guide pedestrians safely around construction zones.

Overall, hoarding serves multiple purposes: safety, security, branding, and marketing—transforming otherwise disruptive construction areas into clean, informative, and visually engaging spaces.
